BRITISH TROOPS' GLORIOUS C

CORRESPONDENT'S VIVID

MINISTERIAL CRISIS IN BUL

HOW LOOS WAS CARR D.

GLORIOUS CHARGE OF RITISH.

PHIC NARRATIVE.

(R ER'S SPECIAL WARSERVICE)

LONDON, Sept. 30.

telegram from Reuter's correspondent h the British Headquarters, dated Sept- mber 28th says: The first glorious charge of the British from Vermelles trenches on Saturday morning carried them right through the village of Loos to the summit and beyond Hill 70. The men left the trenches at 6.30, when the sun had risen sufficiently to make the enemy parapet clearly visible. The officers stood with watches in hands, impatiently awaiting the minute when batteries in the rear should lengthen their range, and the men stood with bayonets fixed and ladders ready to swarm up the parapets. At last the whistle sounded and the troops rushed off. They were irresistible and carried the enemy's first and second lines within an hour, and by eight the whole unit in question was streaming through the streets of Loos.

BAYONET AND BOMB WORK.

The Colonel of one regiment followed his men over the parapet and reached first of the enemy's trenches, but was astonished to find no trace of the attacking companies. The Colonel crossed the trench and entered the second line, where he caught sight of his men in the distance dashing through Loos. The village itself was protected by a triple line of wire of extraordinary thickness and strength, with barbs nearly an inch long. The first two lines had been destroyed by artillery, but the third still stood and had to be cut by the men standing up fully exposed to fire. The German dead were piled four deep in some trenches surrounding the village. Bayonet and bomb work was in full swing in winding streets. Many cellars contained Germans, and our bomb throwers, dashing into houses, pulled up the flags of cellars and dropped bombs. Hidden machine-guns were also discovered in several places and had to be routed out.

RAIN OF PROJECTILES.

The commander of one battalion sheltered with signallers in a solidly built house from German shells, but soon was surprised by a rain of projectiles. They found after some search two superimposed dugouts in the vicinity, in the lower of which was a German artillery officer with a telephone busily directing a battery miles in the rear. In spite of British occupation he had bravely remained at his post and, learning that officers of importance were in the vicinity he ordered houses to be shelled.

Hundreds of dead and wounded were found lying in the debris of houses. The church was a mere shapeless mass of bricks. Everywhere we found fortified machine gun emplacements, especially in the cemetery, and field guns were found in cemented entrenchments. A few French inhabitants were still alive, mostly women.

LAST RUSH.

The last rush of the attackers carried the summit of Hill 70, half a mile east of the village. Some even went beyond till they were checked by a powerful earthwork defence. The enemy's batteries were now concentrating, on the Hill, and the attackers were ordered to entrench a hundred yards from the summit. Fierce fighting continued round the Hill all Sunday and Monday. Battalions of the new Army were conspicuous in the attack. Men who had had no experience of real fighting, advanced most steadily under a terrible fire, hauled forth Germans firing from cellars and charged and captured machine guns firing through holes in cottage walls, all amid terrifying din, while the air overhead was thick with bursting shrapnel.

KAISER IN THE WEST.

TWO GENERALS DISMISSED.

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 29.

German newspapers state that two generals have been dismissed owing to the Franco-British successes. They hope that General Hindenburg will be sent to the West.

A statement of the "Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung" shows that the Kaiser is now on the Western Front. It says on September 24, accompanied by the Crown Prince, he distributed crosses to troops who had been exposed to a specially severe artillery fire.

UNABATED STRUGGLE IN CHAMPAGNE,

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

PARIS, Sept. 29.

A communiqué says: Continued progress eastward of Souchez was made last night until Hill 140, the highest of the Vimy Hills was reached and the orchards south of it. Three hundred unwounded Prussian Guardsmen were captured h...

STRUGGLE IN CHAMPAGNE UNABATED.

The struggle continues unabated in Champagne. Fresh bodies of Germans surrendered northward of Massiges totalling a thousand. All were taken yesterday evening in this one sector.

VIOLENT FIGHTING IN CHAMPAGNE.

LONDON, Sept. 30.

A Paris communiqué says fighting continued all day on the heights between Souchez and Vimy. We maintained all the newly captured positions.

There is still violent fighting in Champagne before the enemy's rear positions, and with the object of reducing the salient north of Mesnil, where German fractions are still holding their ground.

We progressed on the slopes of Tahure knoll and the outskirts of the village, also north of Massiges.

HUGE GERMAN LOSSES IN FRANCE.

OVER 120,000 IN CHAMPAGNE AND ARTOIS.

PARIS, Sept. 29.

A communiqué says that the German losses in Artois and Champagne now amount to over 120,000. The total of prisoners is over 23,000 and 79 guns have been captured.

An unofficial Paris estimate places the captures at over 350 officers and 25,000 men. Tempestuous weather is rendering operations most difficult.

EXCEEDING THE STRENGTH OF THREE ARMY CORPS.

LONDON, Sept. 29.

The introduction to a Paris communique says: "The Germans have not only been forced to abandon along an extended front positions strongly entrenched upon which they had orders to resist to the end, but they have sustained losses exceeding the strength of three army corps."

The communiqué adds that 17,055 prisoners with 310 officers have already passed through Chalons.

Progress has been made in clearing the battlefield and taking stock of arms and every kind of park and trench material which the enemy abandoned.

The Germans violently bombarded the French positions along the Aisne valley region. French guns replied energetically.

President Poincaré, in a message to the Army, congratulates it upon its incomparable ardour and sublime devotion. It has definitely affirmed its superiority over the enemy.

GERMAN CONFIDENCE SHAKEN.

(NEWS BUREAU.)

LAHORE, Sept. 30.

A "Civil and Military Gazette" special cables says:—

The week-end successes have shaken the German confidence in machine-gun fire for holding their lines. Men must be brought from the East to the West when they cannot be spared. The weather hampered the British attack appreciably. The "Daily Mail's" Paris correspondent states that it rendered the movement of heavy artillery extremely difficult.

AUSTRIAN VANDALS.

A "Civil and Military Gazette" special... able says:—

"The Times" Venice correspondent says ...e Austrians at Trent defaced Dante's ...atue using it as a rifle target.

THE CROWN PRINCE'S BAFFLED ATTACK.

A BLOODY HAND-TO-HAND FIGHT.

FRENCH TROOPS' GALLANTRY.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

PARIS, Sept. 29.

The Crown Prince's attack was as furious as any in the war.

The French parapets melted away under furious bombardment and then began the gushes of liquid fire. But French stood firm and poured sheets of lead into the advancing Germans. A bloody hand to hand fighting followed. The French troops were almost buried in the masses of Germans, but the reserves taking no heed of the gas made the enemy waver and eventually the Germans returned to their own trenches. They were prevented from bringing up supports by the French guns.

SUPPLEMENTARY DETAILS,

WHOLE GERMAN LINE THREATENED.

(NEWS BUREAU.)

ALLAHABAD, Sept. 30.

The "Pioneer's" London correspondent cabled on 29th September:—

The French outside Givenchy en Gohelle four miles south-west of Lens, are two miles from the Lens-Arras road, just beyond which lie the enemy heights. The French objective last May, Hill 70, now in British hands, would mean that the enemy railway serving Lens is exposed to artillery fire. Vimy would overlook the plain of Lille. It was this district about which during the summer fighting American correspondents permitted to view the German lines wrote that any retirement here must be a long one as the next line is a long way back.

One correspondent at the British Headquarters, referring to a remark in Sir J. French's despatch that "We have drawn the enemy's reserves enabling the French on our right to progress," says the French were unable to make an impression on Souchez village until Sunday when the German reserves counter-attacked the British, and explains that we were attacking all along the line in order to prevent the strengthening of any part of it. Germany believed that by the help of her great machine she could hold the front and then take the offensive with fewer troops than her opponents. The calculation long seemed justified. Now, either the Allies possess an equally strong machine or they have found a way of giving their manpower its chance.

The papers in London and Paris nevertheless warn the public against anticipating too speedy results. It is necessary to prepare a further advance.

CROWN PRINCE'S COMMUNICATIONS THREATENED.

The French in Champagne at two points are only two miles from the Bezancourt-Apremont Railway, which has been described as the key to the Argonne. Both points of the nearest French approach, however, are westward of the important junction Challerange, where the line from Vouziers, where the Crown Prince's headquarters are situated, joins this line. The extreme right of the French advance north of Massigny is almost due south of this joint. The Crown Prince's violent attacks are attributed to anxiety for his communication with the headquarters.

The mails from Paris quote prisoners stating that the French curtain of fire preceding the attack was so effective in hampering supplies that they were foodless for three days.

EARTH TREMORS ON THE RAND.

(NEWS BUREAU.)

LAHORE, Sept. 30.

A "Civil and Military Gazette" cable says:—

A Central News message from Johannesburg says the severest earth tremor recorded on the Rand occurred yesterday. Some natives were killed and injured at a Village on the Main Reef Mine. Tremors shaking large buildings to their foundations continue.

INDIAN WOUNDED IN LONDON.

All wounded Indian officers in hospitals and depots in England who were able to travel, were brought to London yesterday as the guests of the Maharaja of Kapurthala. They were taken to see Sir Philip Sassoon's House in Park Lane and Madame Tussaud's

DISAPPEARS IN A TREACHEROUS MORASS.

LONDON, Sept. 30.

A telegram to the "Morning Post" from Petrograd says guerilla bands are already appearing in the rear of the Germans, consisting of peasants whose homesteads have been burned, led by Cossacks.

A German column of all the three arms was recently surrounded by an insignificant force which silently crept along secret paths through marshes and then raised an alarm from all sides.

The Germans were thrown into a panic and the whole column disappeared in a treacherous morass.

RUSSIAN SUCCESS IN GALICIA

TWO LINES OF TRENCHES CAPTURED.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 30

A communiqué says: German attacks near Friedrichstadt and Dvinsk were repulsed, but the Russians gave way somewhat southeast of Osmiana, east of Vilna, while south of Pripet repeated German attacks, strongly reinforced, compelled the Russians to withdraw to the right bank of the Styr.

Three enemy attacks at Novo Alexinetz failed.

There waws a desperate engagement on the Styr, west of Tarnopol, where the Russians, supported by powerful artillery, captured two lines of trenches.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

APPLICATION FOR ANNULMENT OF AJUDICATION.

(Before Mr. Justice Davar.)

IN THE MATTER OF DWARKADAS TEJBHANDAS AND OTHERS. Insolvents.

Mr. T. J. Strangman, instructed by Messrs. Mulla and Mulla, appeared on behalf of the applicant Narsumal Gokuldas, creditors of the insolvent to the extent of Rs. 7,100 and moved on the affidavit of Radhakissondas Chimanlal that the order of adjudication of the insolvent dated 11th April, 1912, be annulled.

The firm of Nasumal Gokuldas had filed three suits against the insolvent in the Shikarpur Court, Sindh, without knowing that he was adjudicated an insolvent. Last Monday the creditor applied to his Lordship for leave to proceed with these suits under section 17. His Lordship refused to grant such leave because he said that the leave ought to have been obtained before filing the suits; but suggested to Mr. Strangman that he might apply for the annulment of the adjudication order.

His Lordship granted a rule nisi calling upon the insolvent and the Official Assignee to show cause why the adjudication order should not be annulled. Rule was made returnable on 17th November, 1915.

CHARGE OF FORGERY AGAINST A BANKER.

MR. NORTON'S DEFENCE.

(NEWS BUREAU.)

NAGPUR, Sept. [redacted]

An interesting appeal was argued yesterday before Mr. J. Stanyon, Additional Judicial Commissioner, on behalf of one Amolakchand, a rich banker of Buldana. Rao Bahadur Kelkar, Sessions Judge, West Berar Division, convicted Amolak on a charge of abetting the forgery of a bond, mainly on the testimony of an approver, who is an attesting witness, and sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment. Against this conviction and sentence the present appeal was preferred.

Mr. Norton instructed by the Hon. Mr. Joshi of Amraoti, who conducted the Sessions case, argued for the appellant. The questions argued by the learned counsel were the questions of law, such as the sufficiency of an approver's testimony to support conviction, as also questions of fact as to reliability of the approver.

The Hon. Sir B. K. Bose and Mr. Dillon also appeared for the appellant.

BOMBAY POLICE COURTS.

RAILWAY DEFAMATION CASE.

ACCUSED'S STATEMENTS.

At the Esplanade Police Court, yesterday, the Chief Presidency Magistrate resumed the hearing of the case in which Mr. W. Charles Lewis, lately special-duty Inspector, G. I. P. Railway, charged Manikrao, a typist in the Goods Superintendent's Office at Wadi Bunder, and Vithal Ramji, a clerk in the same office, with defamation. Messrs. P. Godinho, DeSouza and De Cruz, appeared for the complainant, while Mr. Azad, barrister, with Mr. Gadkari, defended the first accused, and Mr. N. N. Saher and Mr. Sohrab B. Banaji, barristers, defended the second accused.

Mr. J. S. Lambert, Deputy Traffic Manager, G. I. P. Railway, deposed that under instructions from the General Traffic Manager, he was appointed, with Mr. Jamieson of the Audit Department, as member of a board of enquiry to investigate into the allegations made against Mr. Lewis. It certainly would be an irregularity if an office card pass were used by a clerk journeying for his private purpose but it would not be so serious as to merit dismissal. He would have, on coming to know of it, undoubtedly called for an explanation from the official concerned.

FIRST ACCUSED'S STATEMENT.

The first accused in the course of his statement, alleged:

I am a typist clerk in the Goods Superintendent's Office, G. I. P. Railway, Wadi Bunder, and reside at Dadar. I know the complainant I also know accused No. 2, who is in my office.

On Monday the 31st May 1915, accused No. 2 told me that Mr. Dhirajlal Ichharam, a ticket-examiner checked his pass at Kalyan and took possession of the same and that he refused to return the pass to him and asked him to see Mr. Lewis that evening. He narrated everything that happened that day at Kalyan. This was for the first time that I knew anything about this case. It is quit false that I went and gave information to Mr. Lewis about this case as stated by him in para 2 of his complaint.

Accused No. 2 requested me to go and see Mr. Lewis on his behalf. I accordingly went to Mr. Lewis's bunglow at Dadar. I found Mr. D. Ichharam at his bungalow and I asked whether Mr. Lewis was in. Mr. D. Ichharam said that he was taking his food and asked me to wait. After sometime Mr. Lewis came out and I mentioned to him the purpose for which I had gone there and requested him to return the pass to accused No. 2. Mr. Lewis asked me to send accused No. 2 to his bunglow that evening. I then went to the office and told accused No. 2 accordingly. On the evening of the same day accused No. 2 and I went to the house of the complainant at about 7 p.m. Both Messrs. Lewis and D. Ichharam were there. The accused No. 2 requested both of them to return the pass, but they declined. Mr. D. Ichharam then took me aside and told me that if accused No. 2 paid Rs. 200 they would return the pass. The complainant was then near by, I pointed out two fingures to accused No. 2 who took them it appears to be three as it was dark and there was no light as we were seated in the compound. Accused No. 2 then explained his inability to pay that amount as he was already indebted to the Co-operative Society of the Railway Company, and requested them to [redacted] amount when Mr. D. Ichharam [redacted] No. 2 must pay two [redacted] Then Messrs. Lewis and [redacted] ted good many cases of railway [redacted] narrated how many were dis- [redacted] service and prosecuted for [redacted] ces. Accused No. 2 agreed to pay Rs. 200. We then left. On the way back I told accused No. 2 that i did not like the proposal and that he should not pay the amonat. Accused No. 2 was much trigitened and said that he would rather pay the amount than lose his long service and Fund. What is stated by the complainant against me in para 4 is false.

On the 1st June, 1915, accused No. 2 and I went to Mr. Lewis's bunglow after 7 p.m. Mr. Lewis was alone there. As alleged by Mr. Lewis a Mr. Guzdar was not there when we went there. Mr. Lewis offered us chairs and accused No. 2 told him that he was not able to bring Rs. 200, but that he had secured Rs. 150. I also then requested Mr. Lewis to accept the amount. Mr. Lewis said, "Never Mind." Accused No. 2 then gave me a bundle of Notes which I passed on to Mr. Lewis's hands, who took it and kept it in his pocket. Mr. Lewis then went inside of the bunglow and returned after a few minutes with the pass and handed it over to me, which I handed over to accused No. 2 Mr. Lewis then asked me to tell Mr. D. Ichharam, who was not then present that accused No. 2 paid him only Rs. 150. We then left. On our way back as I had not counted the money I asked accused No. 2 what the amount actually was, and he said it contained Rs. 150 only.

On the 23rd. June 1915, Mr. Flynn, Goods Superintendent, sent for me and asked me to go along with accused No. 2 (Mr. Vithal Ramji) to Mr. Lambert with a memo. Accordingly we went to the Manager's Office and saw Mr. Lambert the Deputy Traffic Manager "Coaching," who said to accused No. 2 that he was a fool to pay that amount to Mr. Lewis. Mr. Lambert then said that Mr. Lewis was under Mr. Scott and that we will have to make a report there. Mr. Lambert himself went and saw Mr. Scott. He then came back and told us both to get the written statements as Mr. Scott required them. We did so the next day and Mr. Scott took us to Mr. Laidlaw, the General Traffic Manager. He took our statements and told me and accused No. 2 not to mention to Mr. Lewis or to any one else that we have made such statements.

What is stated by the complainant in para 6 of his complaint is absolutely false. What happened was this:—A day or two after I made my statement to the General Traffic Manager. I was passing along Mr. Lewis's bunglow when he called me and asked me how the Wadi Bunder case was exposed and asked me, if I had made any statement, and, if so, to what effect. Under persuasion I told him what I stated. Mr. Lewis asked me to change my statement, I said how can I change it.

Mr. Lewis told me then to make the following statement:—

"That the bundle was kept on the chair, Mr. Lewis was not aware of it?"

I then asked Mr. Lewis what I should say if the Manager were to ask me as to what became of the bundle, and Mr. Lewis told me to say that it was lying on the chair when I left. Mr. Lewis further said that he himself would say that Mr. Manikrao (i.e. I) left the bunglow first and Mr. Vithal Ramji afterwards and Mr. Vithal himself picked up the bundle. Further Mr. Lewis said that whenever I am asked a question about money I should say that Mr. Lewis was not aware of it. I agreed to make this statement, because, Mr. Lewis threatened that he would make it hot for me, if I were not to change the statement. He also told me that thereby I should save him (Mr. Lewis) and D. Ichharam. Mr. Lewis also told me that I had a very short service in the Railway and that I should resign the post. He further said that by doing so I would be able to save him as well as Mr. D. Ichharam.

I then went to Office and told Mr. Fernandez that I wanted to resign the post. I told him that I was threatened by Mr. Lewis that morning and that he had asked me to change the statement. Mr. Fernandez told me not to resign like a fool and that there was no fear if I told the truth.

It was not true that I was suspended, and that I went and told Mr. Lewis that I was reinstated.

I again went to Mr. Lewis when Mr. Atmaram was with me. We both went to his bunglow when in the presence of Mr. Atmaram, Mr. Lewis asked me if I had changed by statement. I said no.

Mr. Lewis further on said if I had not changed my statement it would go very hard

LLING MOTION PICTURE NOVEL

paper in Collaboration with the Famous Pathe Pl

This is from Motion Picture Film of "Pauline" by the Famous Pathe Players.
Pauline signs the contracts while a Moving Picture Actress while the Villainous Owen Gloats over the Idea of the Death he is plotting for her

There was loitering about the poster a quaint hybrid group of broken down actors and actresses and stage stricken young fellows and girls, looking for their first chance before the camera. Among the former class was a small and furtive man whose watery blue eyes seemed to seek a hiding place behind a drooping forelock of yellow hair and whose face carried the dissolute furrows that mark a man grown old at twenty-five.

He evidently had studied the poster with disgust and was about to depart, spurning a position beneath his imagined dignity, when he came face to face with Pauline.

His stare of admiration was not deliberately rude. Little Woodby Booth, who had set out to be a Shakespearian artist and had wound up at moving picture piece-work, still retained in his jaded mind some susceptibility to inspiration. The loveliness of Pauline took his breath away and he gazed at her for a moment almost innocently.

But what good there was left in Woodby Booth was so little that he was compelled seemingly, to conserve it. He never permitted much of it to crop out at a time. From an uplifting vision, Pauline quickly became a possible, victim to his piratical mind. He followed the party into the studio.

Mr. Gasnier, the director, looked a little weary of interviewing the immortals—looked as though devils and angels had come to appear very much alike to him. But he surveyed his latest batch of applicants with more than usual contempt. He challenged Pauline before she had a chance to speak.

"You wish to go on the motion picture stage, do you not?" he inquired. "I want to say to you and your friends before we go any further that the motion picture stage is not a plaything for the rich. It is business and work. Are you looking for amusement, or for work, Miss Marvin?"

"I assure you I have the most serious purpose in asking for a position," replied Pauline. Then, inspired by a choking sound from the direction of Harry's chair, she added: "If my brother has been speaking to you about me, you have been thoroughly misinformed, Mr. Gasnier."

"And you wish, of course a place of some importance—a leading role in one of the six-reel specials?"

Pauline fathomed his sarcasm. "I expect to begin in small parts—as an angel, for instance," she suggested pleasantly.

"That sounds better. You are engaged as an angel. If you will please sign this contract I shall be obliged. We are taking the Paradise Lost company to Devil's Island at great expense and we do not care to risk missing any of them at the last minute. And the others? Have we any more candidates?" he added, turning to the waiting group.

For answer Woodby Booth and Owen stood up and approached the director—Woodby with all the pomp of histrionic pride; Owen a bit sheepishly. He left the conversation to the actor, with whom he had struck up an acquaintance and in whom he saw vague possibilities.

"I would consent to take one of the positions, inasmuch as my health demands a sea journey. My friend, Mr. Owen, is compelled, by his sense of duty, to accompany his ward, Miss Marvin," proclaimed Woodby.

Gasnier laughed. "Mr. Owen can play a condemned soul and you look like the Devil," said he.

Woodby bristled for a haughty reply, but a glance at Pauline, who had just finished the signing of her contract, stopped him. He picked up a pen and signed with a flourish. Owen followed.

"Our steamer sails at noon Thursday of next week. I will send you the particulars. Good-day," said Mr. Gasnier.

Other would-be devils and prospective angels were scanning the poster as the Marvin party emerged from the studio. Booth clung leech-like to Owen until the thud of the closing motor door shut him out. Then he went back, with a new ardor, to his stately business of loitering around the studio door, while Harry Marvin and Lucille, ensconced in secret confab in the recesses of the great limousine, whispered mutual congratulations on the progress of the plot to keep Polly from peril.

"She'll be as safe as a baby in Brooklyn," chuckled Harry. "She'll have about as many adventures as a fish in the Aquarium."

"Yes," said Lucille. "I think the lioness will be tamed. But I'm sorry"——

"Sorry for what?"

"That Owen is going along. Sometimes, Harry, I think that Owen encourages her to go into these adventures. At least he doesn't oppose them very much."

Owen had roamed down to the back of the pier to say his farewell. Only one old friend was there to see him off, and that one preferred to enact the parting behind a pile of crated machinery and to disappear without going near the steamer. It was Hicks.

After they had shaken hands Owen rejoined Pauline and escorted her up the gang-plank. Woodby Booth followed. The plank was drawn up and the virile little ship put out of port without benefit of tugs. They drove back to his office with a sense of relief and security that he had never known before when Pauline was absent.

He plunged into his work, and the third day had passed before he remembered suddenly that he had promised to pay a flying visit to Devil's Island.

He was reminded of it by a telephone call from Chauncey Hamlin, who had also agreed to go. It was Saturday noon, and they had arranged to start at 2 o'clock.

Harry managed somehow to get a few things packed and catch the Key West train, on which he found Chauncey comfortably established.

"I don't know what we can do in the way of getting a boat down there, but it ought to be easy," said Harry.

"Oh, dear, yes; it's the country where boats grow on the trees," drawled Chauncey.

But his confidence was somewhat impaired an hour after they arrived at Key West.

"We're a day late now," Harry said. "I know you'll perish if you are not allowed to bathe and dress for dinner, old boy, but it can't be done. We must get to the Island this morning."

Chauncey accepted the edict with the best grace he could muster, and leaping into a cab at the station they sped for the pier.

A seasoned tub captain smoking beside his docked vessel looked up in amused surprise at the call of Harry.

"Charter your ship, skipper?"

"Wa—al, it hez been done," said the captain. "Where did yuh wish to stop at—Caracas or Buenos Ayres?"

Harry laughed. "Is that your route."

"Wa—al," said the captain, "I might say it is. Some goes to Caracas, some to Buenos Ayres; some just gets off along shore somewheres. It's accordin' to how much they've stole." He eyed the suit cases with interest.

The young man burst into a roar.

"We've only stolen enough to take us to Devil's Island. Can you do that—right off the reel—now?"

The skipper's limp form suddenly stiffened and his languid eye became keen. His voice was low but piercing as he demanded:

"Devil's Island? Devil's Island—to-day?"

"Yes," said Harry glibly. "We have to meet some friends there. Get us there before dark and we'll be satisfied. How much"——

He was taking out his wallet, but the skipper stopped him with both hands upraised and shaking head.

"Not for all the money between here an' Halifax," he said in an excited whisper. "Friends o' yours—hey?" And he swung away to his tug with a speed that was astonishing for one of his barrel-like mold.

Chauncey and Harry stared at each other in amazement.

"Extrawdinary erratic, I say," gasped Chauncey.

"At least that," said Harry. "I'd give a good deal just to know what's on that fellow's mind. But come on. Let's see if they're all like that."

They were not all like that. In fact, it was strikingly peculiar how very different was the attitude of the second man of the sea whom they approached.

If Harry had seen this amiable person a few minutes before standing on the same pier in earnest conversation with a dapper gentleman from New York, he might have

LORD ROSEBERY'S ADVICE

TRUST THE GOVERNMENT.

THRIFT IN PRACTICE AND PRECEPT.

The Earl of Rosebery was the central figure at an interesting ceremony in Glasgow Trades House on September 3, when he was admitted an honorary member of the Incorporation of Weavers, a philanthropic guild dating back 400 years. Mr. William George Black, the Deacon, presided, and presented Lord Rosebery with an artistically designed membership ticket, enclosed in an antique casket. Lord Rosebery having subscribed the roll and received the right hand of fellowship delivered an inspiring speech.

Referring to the motto of the Incorporation of Weavers, "Truth with trust," he said that up till August, 1914, that seemed to be an admirable motto, but he hoped their diplomatists when they were called upon to settle terms of peace with the enemy would entirely disregard the motto he referred to. After all, they were called on now for a different kind of weaving from any to which they put their hand before. He recalled Gray's famous lines, "Weave the warp and weave the woof, The winding-sheet of Edward's race." They were now at this moment engaged in weaving all over the world the winding-sheet, as they trusted, of the most infamous conspiracy that had ever been known against the liberties of mankind. That conspiracy, carried on both openly and in subterranean manner, might well have been successful. Every other nation was comparatively unprepared—Great Britain the most so. The design was to obliterate all the smaller Powers, to ride roughshod over all public faith and honour, and to make the larger Powers only tributaries of Prussia.

Great Britain could not stand idle as an accomplice, or even as a neutral observer, of such an unspeakable crime as that. She put her foot down, and at the stamp of her foot there responded millions of men as in the ancient fable. There was the tramp of men not only from England, Scotland and Ireland, but from other places all over the world, in every region and in every clime where the Union Jack waved. That was the unexpected result of the outbreak of that hideous conspiracy that was meant to break up the British Empire—consolidating it in a way that the most ardent Imperialist could never have hoped for. Blood was thicker than water. It was much thicker. It was more than that—it was the cement from which the Empire was constructed.

THE QUESTION OF THRIFT.

At the present moment the newspapers were occupied with various topics relating to the war, and one was thrift, which was not a new topic for a Scottish audience. He must say it was very delightful for him to see a British Government and a British Parliament advocating the cause of thrift, because for many years past they had employed all the opportunities of expenditure with such advantage and profusion that they had brought our peace expenditure up to £200,000,000 a year without, so far as he was aware, a single voice being raised in Government or in Parliament of remonstrance or for economy.

He believed there was being raised at the present moment in the neighbourhood of Westminster Palace a group of statuary by Rodin, the illustrious French sculptor of the Burghers of Calais, with halters round their necks coming to implore the pardon of King Edward. He could not help suggesting that a corresponding group should also be made—Ministers and members of Parliament, not all of them, but a representative number, with halters round their necks, coming penitentially for the first time in their political career to advocate thrift. He hoped now that from this time onwards they would have not merely the preaching, but the practice of thrift in their public departments, and in their House of Commons, so that at least they would reap that benefit in the calamity of war in which they were engaged.

COMPULSORY SERVICE.

The second point to which he would address the attention was one which the newspapers might at the present time be said to reek—the question of compulsory service. It was an admirable subject for polemics and arguments, but the matter did not strike him as one which ought to fill to the extent it did the columns of the Press. They had established without great effort a national Government, which meant a Government in which they put unbounded confidence, positively because it was a collection of the most able men, and negatively because there was no other Government to take its place. They knew also the disadvantage of swapping horses when crossing the stream, and their only course then, as it seemed to him, as patriotic citizens was to put illimitable confidence in the Government.

The Government which did not represent a united nation represented nothing, and if they had confidence in the Government for all the other questions relating to the war surely they should have confidence in the Government which alone had the necessary information as to this question of compulsory service. Could they not trust the Government—and of course in that respect the Government was mainly Lord Kitchener—could they not trust Lord Kitchener to say to the country exactly the moment at which, if it ever occurred, he thought compulsory service should be imposed? Why, then, the wrangling about it in the newspapers? Those who argue could not know half so much as the Government, and if they did not trust in the Government and Lord Kitchener they were representing indeed a lost cause. He believed if Lord Kitchener found the moment ripe, and found the need imperative, he would not scruple to ask the country to give him the powers requisite to carry compulsory service into effect.

LIMIT TO WAR PROFITS.

LLOYD GEORGE'S TELEGRAM TO LABOUR CONGRESS.

The following telegram from Mr. Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, was read by the president, Mr. J. A. Seddon, at the Trade Union Congress at Bristol on Sept. 7:—

"I observe in the report of your able speech (yesterday) the following words:—

"'The share of labour in meeting the danger is seen in the increasing output of munitions and the willingness of skilled trades to do all possible. We invite the Minister of Munitions to be equally keen in carrying out his promise to deal with war profits.'

"I have already under the Munitions Act placed 714 firms under control. That includes the bulk of the important firms in this kingdom engaged wholly or mainly in manufacturing munitions of war. In every case profits are limited in accordance with the terms of the Munitions Act, so that the benefit of any suspension of trade unions regulations shall accrue to the State and not to the employer. No profit-mongering is possible in these works.

"As your words—unintentionally, I feel certain—might convey the impression that the Government had not carried out their part of the bargain with the trade unions to limit profits. I beg you to make this clear to the congress and to urge it to persuade unions throughout the country to carry out their part of the bargain by suspending, during the period of the war, all regulations and practices which have the effect of restricting the output of material so urgently required for the protection of our gallant troops at the front and for the achievement of victory for the nation.

"LLOYD GEORGE."

THE PERILS OS PAULINE

levelled glass, grinning as he gazed at them.

A deck hand approached the skipper.

"Are they——?" He drew his forefinger across his throat significantly. His tone was one of polite curiosity—nothing more.

"No—not them," chuckled the skipper. "That wasn't part o' this here job. This was a mean feller that hired me. He didn't want no quick merciful killin'. He wanted it done—like that there."

And he handed the glass to the deck-hand.

Chauncey had flopped dejectedly on a rock.

"Now what? Do you believe that brute ran away and left us?"

"Pretty near know it," said Harry, calling from the water's edge. 'His boat would have been all right for hours.. The tide is going out."

"And which way are we going?"

"In," said Harry, starting back to the woods. "We've got to find water first, and then we've got to work."

"But, I say, it's easier to knock across the old island and find the settlements. If you want a drink, there's still a drop in the bottle." He reached hospitably toward his hip pocket to which he had transferred the whiskey from the suit case.

"No, and don't you drink any of it, either," commanded Harry. "You'll probably be thirsty enough without burning yourself up with that."

"But I can stand a little thirst. I'm not such a mollycoddle as you think I am. Let's start for the other side."

"Chauncey, we stay here, or near here—it's our only chance. In the first place if we start for the other side we'll only get lost again. In the second place, there isn't any other side that has people on it. This is the wrong island. There isn't anybody on it. We've been set off here to starve and thirst to death. We can stand the starving a few days, but not the thirsting. We've got to find water."

Chauncey Hamlin's weak face turned blank with astonishment. For an instant Harry thought he was going to show the white feather. But he merely got slowly to his feet, stretched a delicate fist toward the sea and uttered one long drawn venomous, fearfully sincere cuss word.

"I agree with you," said Harry fervently. "Now you stay here and answer whenever I call. I'm going to look for water. I'll anchor by your voice. So don't move, no matter if you don't hear me for a while."

For an hour Harry oved through the entangled undergrowth in a widening circle, they hallooed to one another, until suddenly the hail from the forest was pitched in a high key of triumph.

"I've—got—it," yelled Harry.

He came back to the beach slowly, pausing every few yards to break twigs and mark the trail to the little spring he had found.

There was an old cask among the strange variety of driftwood that lined the beach and this they carried into the forest and filled at the spring.

"No to get to work," said Harry.

Chauncey looked at him perplexed. The word was not in his vocabulary at the best, and how it could apply to a deserted island without anything to work with was past the fathoming of his imagination.

"Work?" he repeated.

"Yes. There's enough driftwood to make some sort of a raft, and that's our chance. Remember, you pick out only sound boards and spars, and look sharp for rope or wire, if we have to, we can use vines, but wire will save half the work. You go up on the beach and I'll go down. Here's the signal flag."

He thrust a small stick into the ground and tied his handkerchief to the top of it.

"But, isn't it rather late?" inquired Chauncey. "Really, I'm a bit played out after all this tramping—and getting so put out with that rascally skipper. Couldn't we put it over until morning?"

"We'll work while we've got the strength in us, Chauncey. It's going to be a race against time. If there's a good moon we can work all night."

For the first time Chauncey seemed to understand what their position was. Without a word he rose and set off up the beach.

NIECE OF LORD KELVIN.

FAILURE TO REGISTER AS ALIEN.

At Lyme Regis on Sept. 3 the charges against Mrs. Charlotte Mary Vesey Steiler, aged 39, of Dulwich, a visitor to Lyme Regis, of failing to register herself as an enemy alien and giving false information as to her nationality, were further investigated, when the prosecution also preferred similar charges against the accused's son, Eric Gordon Steiler, aged 15.

The defending counsel said the accused admitted the charges subject to the qualification that the offences were committed in ignorance. The boy, of course, was entirely innocent of having done anything wrong as he naturally looked to his mother to attend to any such matters.

With regard to Mrs. Steiler, it was now eleven years since her husband, a German left her, and, inasmuch as she was of English birth and her parents English people, it had never occurred to her that she was anything else than English herself. He might say that the accused lady was a niece of the well-known scientist the late Lord Kelvin, and had a number of relatives fighting in the British Army. She had also taken an active part in Red Cross work.

The Bench decided to dismiss the charges against the boy, but fined Mrs. Steiler £1 in respect of the charge of making a false statement as to her nationality and 10s. in respect of neglecting to register as an enemy alien.

Her First Baby

Many a mother is at a loss to know what food to give her first baby. Although she showers all her love and care upon him, baby still does not get on. But her anxiety is ended directly she tries Glaxo.

On the advice of the doctor this baby was given Glaxo, and the father writes "There has never been a moment's anxiety since we commenced with Glaxo. Baby is strong in every way, full of life, happy as the day is long, sleeps well, has never been ill, or refused a bottle. He has consistently gained in weight and has cut his teeth without any trouble. He weighs now at nine months 22 lbs., and is to our minds the picture of a perfect baby. To me it is a pleasure to recommend Glaxo as, being a Chemist, I see so much of the evils of improper feeding of babies, and your food completely fills its duties as a substitute for nature's first food."

Glaxo does resemble mother's milk because it contains the same quantity of bone-making, brain-building and muscle-producing material, and is therefore a complete food for all babies from birth.
